Monthly report – July 2021

Renewed assurances of the FED once again suppressed inflation induced market concerns leading to lower rates and new all-time highs for equities. Within equity markets, US and Europe led the move up while Asia lagged, due to delayed reopening prospects from low vaccination rates as well as China's regulatory crackdown and tightening credit conditions. Longer term US rates continued to fall during July while the US Dollar reversed its upward trend and traded lower against major currencies. Commodities continued to rise, especially energy and metal price while agricultural remained flat or even declined during the month.

The portfolio ended the month flat with mixed results across the main styles. Systematic strategies and Long/Short Equity managers contributed positively. Among the former there was on aggregate, positive results in the different trading approaches: from systematic equity to trend following strategies. Among the latter, the majority of the managers were profitable with the best result from an US based manager. Event Driven slightly deducted, with gains from an Asian strategy being eroded by an US manager. Relative Value was negative for the month with the largest deduction originated from Asian exposure.
