Monthly report – February 2021

February brought a robust earnings season, several resurgent cyclical economic data points and continued support from governments. This was positive for equities while bonds sold off among rising inflation expectations. Interest rates rose mainly on the longer end, while the US Dollar halted its downward trend and ended the month mostly unchanged against a basket of major currencies. Commodities continued their upward trend, led by industrial metals and energy while precious metals sold off lightly.

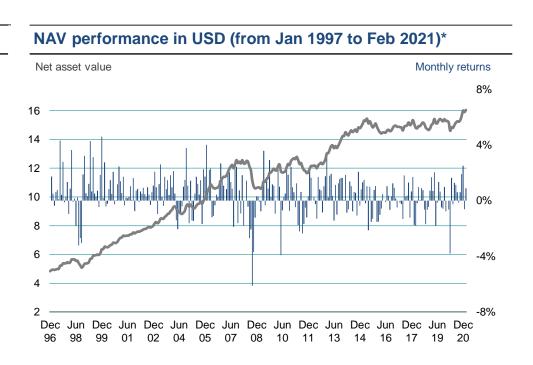

The portfolio ended the month with a solid result as all styles were in positive territory. Largest contribution came from Long/Short Equity with best results from a manager focusing on the tech sector. Two out of three strategies within Relative Value were positive – in aggregate – leading to the best style performance in the portfolio. Event Driven managers had a mixed month but ended as a group in positive territory. Within systematic strategies, Trend-Following posted good gains while Quant Macro results were characterized by a wide dispersion.

All annualised and cumulative statistics are for the period commencing Jan 1997.

¹⁾ A risk free rate of 3.5% is used for calculation purposes.
